After a few jobs in Europe in similar positions Manchester-born Mo Swindelhurst finds herself in the role of P.R. Head at the 5 star Bali Batik Hotel on the Island of the Gods – Bali. The hotel's guests come mainly from England, are 'of a certain age' (the word old is not allowed on site) and return at the same time of year...year after year...after year. They take the same rooms, lie on the same poolside loungers and luxuriate on typical Balinese exotic meals such as chips on banana leaves. There's drama at the hotel though when Mo's long-time-no-see Aunty Sandra (common as muck) turns up with her new toy-boy husband – a former fiancé of Mo's from when she worked in the local chippie in Manchester. Peace talks over lunch end with the couple being rushed to hospital...poisoned...as Mo comes under suspicion of Attempted Murder. Chaos breaks out (sort of) as she tries to carry on as usual. Her best friend at the hotel – Resident Pianist Noel Cowward – suggests she lie back and think of England as he does the same while thinking of an Arab sheik who's offered him his own oasis and falcon (no budgies here, chuck) to return to the Middle East with him. Newly-wed gay boy sculptors Romeo and Julian – from Blackpool – have the room next to the not-so-happy honeymooners and reported a Balinese bear giving birth next door when the couple were sinking into their poisoned comas. While they may have saved the day for the question now is can the doctors save the couple...can Mo get the hotel Sports Day arranged in between fittings for prison designer suits...and can the Macclesfield Morris Dancers shake their tambourines at the athletic event without missing a beat? It's fun...it's fantastic...it's a good read....so get stuck into 'Bali & Chips' right now...you may even book a holiday at the hotel next. Miles of smiles guaranteed.
