The Yellowstone volcano erupts every 600,000 years. The time is now past due. Our American Government hasn't prepared for the aftermath. When an ash layer from 100 foot to 10 foot deep spreads up to 1,000 miles from the source, leaving two-thirds of the country completely uninhabitable, only those with resources on hand will survive.

Mary Kenton, an American Indian, and her survivalist husband, B.K., flee with their friends to their encampment equipped to wait out the carnage. They emerge to help restore what is left of Tulsa, Oklahoma, and the Southern States of America. The danger they face comes from former neighbors, looters, rapists, and migrants fleeing starvation. America's enemies launch terrorist attacks and form mobs bent on taking control of what's left of the United States, the world's largest nuclear power.

Impossible? Think again! We are not prepared for this or any other catastrophe. It's not if. It's when.
