A Prelude to Love: Edition 1 Milan Ester

She waits for him; eagerly. She always has. Oblivious to her, he takes his journey to the gray and white craftsman on the cul-de-sac in the suburbs, three miles from the hospital where he is born. The first years are adventure, and he anticipated the first day of school the entire summer. Then it is the first day of school again. ... And again. She is his first love, he thinks. The golden blonde hair, blue-eyed valley girl in seventh grade History. They even kiss! Junior High, High School, College, three more girlfriends later, he crosses the stage, shakes with one hand, and accepts his degree with the other. It is only a few years on the corporate ladder before he can claim success, but he is curious about the sexy brunette with the seductive gray eyes from the twenty-seventh floor, who smiles at him every time he passes her in the foyer. Now, he is in the foyer at the precise time, 7:49 a.m., to see her every day. She notices.

He is not that naïve to think that dating her will be all bliss, but he knows he has to go for it! He does. She accepts! On a scale of not-so-bad to bliss, they go from very bliss to good, stay there for a year, and then...

A Prelude to Love is a non-fictional short that takes a brief look at our relationships - the part before our and then's, the and then's, and the Lover in us that has the ability to soar to great love destinations, the mediocre that lives plateau, or Fickles. Love that waits for us to dance with her before we take our stage, is crazy about us. Do we dance with her? Do we even know love is that into us? Or, do we choose not to engage love at all?
